

A country of young people

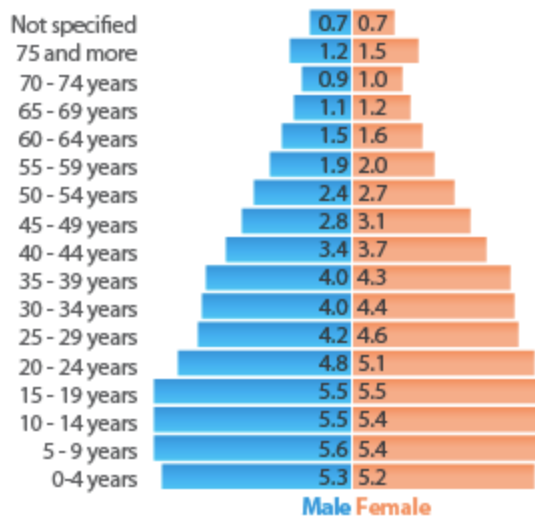

Mexico had a registered population of almost 112.3 million inhabitants in 2010.

In 2010 the country's registered Economically Active Population (EAP) was made up 44.4.

It is estimated that in the next three decades, the number of individuals in working age in Mexico will reach 62 million

Population pyramid (million)

Source: INEGI, Population and housing census 2010

A country with qualified labor

- According to ANUIES, more than 790 thousand students are enrolled in engineering and technology programs, representing the largest pool of engineering talent in America. Every year, more than 90 thousand students graduate from engineering and technology programs (more than three times the number of graduates per capita in the United States, according to UNESCO).
- The Mexican Higher Education System is made up of 2,539 institutions which offer educational services and, of course, international exchange opportunities.